Afterword

Hello, everyone! This is Sakira.

Thank you very much for reading Pretty Man Fighting Dirty. How did you like my [illegible] of my characters? Personally, I [illegible] I liked having really buff dudes. But, as you can see, Hikaru from "A Loving Household" is the delicate type. He's still the normal height of 177cm, but it's because everyone else around him is so big that he looks delicate by comparison. And in case you couldn't tell, the father is like a tiger, the elder son is like a black panther, and the younger son is like a puma. I wonder what that would make Hikaru. An alpaca?

"Cosplay Bride" and the spin-off story "Wild Men Fighting Dirty" had the characters in reversable roles, which is pretty rare for me. You could probably tell as a reader, but I wasn't very confident about effectively drawing them in the uke position. I guess only their positions were reversed.

I was hoping to have their emotional states be equal. They'd fight in making place, in the office, exchange fists, and then sink and make up. It may seem a little trite, but I like writing about couples whose relationships evolve in that way.

Even though I try very seriously when I'm writing, for some reason, all the characters turn into crazy running gags. It's so strange. I really can't figure out why that happens.

My manga was only completed thanks to the help of a lot of people.

Even though this is a labor of love, it is precisely because I love what I do that sometimes I get stuck and depressed when things don't turn out the way I envisioned them. It's thanks to the advice of my team, friends, and editor as well as the encouragement from my fans that I'm still able to get up and grab a hold of my pen.

I thought about the time this past summer when my pet guinea pig, Ginny, took a trip over the rainbow bridge (he passed away). I think to myself that I was still able to keep going thanks to that little guy. And at the same time, I was living for him. There was a period of about two months where I couldn't do anything, but thanks to the support of the people around me, I got back on my feet. I would never live a life alone.

After that slight brush with death, I truly felt what life was, and so I'm more grateful than ever before. Thank you as much, everyone! I just hope that I can give you something back in return. For now, I'll make sure to keep my deadlines and draw lots of manga.
